HISTORY

Partners of the Americas (formerly called Partners of the Alliance) originated with President John F. Kennedy. Oregon and Costa Rica became Partners in 1964 and were among six “charter” Partners. The intent is for Latin American countries, regions, cities of larger countries and individual states, or larger cities, to form a partnership to promote friendships, cultural exchanges, and assistance in various forms. Partners are committees of volunteers -- students, schools, business people, professionals, families -- all who are interested in promoting increased understanding and cooperation between Oregon and Costa Rica.

The Oregon/Costa Rican high school student exchange program was “born” in 1966 when a Spanish teacher from Salem, Mrs. Margaret Byers, took five boys and five girls for a few weeks to stay in Costa Rica. A few years later, the Oregon-to-Costa Rica program was “reborn”.

In the 1960s, Oregon was looked upon as the “Wild West” by Costa Ricans. The first exchange of Costa Rican students to Oregon was canceled and replaced with a group of Costa Rican teachers and others interested to learn if Oregon was really “wild”. The following year students arrived in December to initiate the exchange, which has continued since then.

Two chaperone-counselors accompany 25 students from Costa Rica. The group arrives in December to spend eight weeks in Oregon. The students have spent many weeks going through a “screening process” in Costa Rica. After having been selected, they continue with orientation sessions preparing for their stay in Oregon. The participants are generally well-mannered, young adults looking forward to an experience in Oregon. Some become a bit “homesick” - naturally! However, their chaperones are always available to assist in solving any problems - as are members of the Oregon Partners and, in particular, members of the High School Student Exchange Committee.

The High School Student Exchange Committee arranges for host families for Costa Rican students to live with while they are in Oregon. This committee also selects Oregon students and prepares them to travel to Costa Rica in June, July and August.
